ITALY: The Italian Communist Party (PCI) is now pushing for Christian Democrat (CD) Aldo Moro or possibly incumbent Social Democrat Giuseppe Saragat in the presidential election that began last Thursday.

25X1

[REDACTED] the Communists would now support Moro or his ally, CD titular chief Zaccagnini, if the CD were to jettison its official candidate Amintore Fanfani in favor of either man. Otherwise, the PCI reportedly is inclined to support the re-election of Saragat.

The CD decided to abstain from both ballots on 13 December--evidently to reassess Fanfani's candidacy.

[REDACTED] In recent months many leaders on the left of the political spectrum have expressed the fear that Fanfani would exercise the powers of the presidency in an authoritarian way.
